Punctual at the time appointed back came the lady, and with her a geutleman, whom she introduced into the room already prepared for his reception, and at once left the asylum. An hour had not elapsed before the uew patient called at the top of his voice for the jewels he had brought with him. The doctor was sent for, and as the supposed sick man seemed excited, a straight waistcoat was prescribed. Now, this unlacky gentleman was no other than the clerk of one of the weathiest jewelers in London, who had been victimized by a clever adventuress. The woman, whose hearing and elegant manners had so imposed upon the merchant, had selected some diamonds of great value, and requested them to be sent home for her, and the bill was to be paid. A carriage was standing at the door, and the managed to make his identity known and recover his liberty. The police were immediately sent for and placed upon the track of the ingenious thief.
